

Distinguished delegates,

I, Aadya Gaur, speak on behalf of Udisha, an Indian Civil Society Organization working for Education, Employment & sustainable Development, addressing the priority theme: "Advancing Social Development and Social Justice through Coordinated, Equitable, and Inclusive Policies."

Today, I bring to this Commission the voices of India's 104 million tribal women—8.6% of our population—trapped in a healthcare crisis that demands urgent, coordinated action.

Consider these stark disparities:

- Infant mortality among tribal communities: 41.6 to 44 deaths per 1,000 live births—far above the national average of 35.
- Under-5 mortality: 50+ per 1,000 versus 42 nationally.
- Only 25% receive complete healthcare; just 37% get post-natal care within 48 hours.
- Over 60% suffer severe anaemia, driving pregnancy complications.

Because, Geographical isolation forces women to trek hours over treacherous terrain. Primary health centres suffer chronic staff shortages. Illiteracy exceeds 40%. Poverty creates a vicious health cycle.

Udisha calls for coordinated, equitable, inclusive solutions:

Firstly—culturally competent health systems that honour tribal languages, beliefs, and traditional healers alongside evidence-based care.

Secondly—last-mile access through community health navigators, mobile clinics, and transport networks.

Thirdly—strengthened workforce and data systems, including dedicated tribal maternal mortality monitoring.

And last but not the least—holistic investment in education, nutrition, water, and sanitation.

These are not isolated interventions—they form an integrated policy ecosystem advancing SDG 3, SDG 5, and SDG 10.

Distinguished delegates, empowering tribal women is not charity. It is social justice. It is the foundation of inclusive development. When tribal mothers survive and thrive, entire communities rise.

The United Nations, Member States, and partners must act now. Tribal women's health is India's moral and developmental imperative.

Let us build coordinated systems that leave no woman behind. Let us advance social justice through equitable, inclusive policies.
